THE UPPER TRACT.

Upper Pocahontas is the Scene of Great Industrial Activity.

What Loup Creek is to the coal industry, the West Fork of Green River is to lumber. The O. & I. railway opened up one of the finest timber sections in the State and what was once one of the wildest and most impenetrable wildernesses is now a scene of great activity.

This section was first surveyed in 1794 when Richard Smythe had large surveys made of the country on the waters of Cheat and Greenbrier. Henry Phillips came in and located a small patch of 41,000 acres also.

These men seemed to know a good thing when they saw it but they were about a hundred years ahead of time. They seemed to have gotten tired of paying taxes and for a long time no one claimed the territory, but about 1840 the school commission went for it for the benefit of the literary fund of Virginia, and dividing it into smaller parcels sold it at public auction at the rate of about half a cent an acre. All the titles above Durbin are based on these tax sales.

As time went on the lands became more and more desirable until in the eighties Uriah Hevener made what was considered a most remarkable sale of about 11,000 acres at three dollars an acre.

Up to 1897 the highest price which had been paid for lands there was $8.50 an acre and that but for one tract which occupied an advantageous position in relation to some larger tracts of land. About three dollars an acre was considered a fair price for the lands according to the depositions of a number of citizens of this county in 1898. Since then the railroad put these acres up by leaps and bounds and the prices now range from $25 to $40 an acre.

The great value is in the spruce and hemlock but on the ridges are found patches of hardwood such as sugar, birch, beech, ash and cherry.

The good timber begins at the Randolph and Pocahontas line at the summit. In coming towards Pocahontas the first industry is Moore & Lawton at Oxley, then the Wildell Lumber Co., at Wildell, F. S. Wise & Company at Gertrude, Hoover Brothers at Kelly, Pocahontas Lumber Co. at Burner, W. S. Taylor at Braucher, B. F. McMichael at Fill Run, and several other plants on the 16 miles the names of which we do not know.

Elkins gets more benefits from this region of big saw mills than Marlinton in spite of the fact that it is in Pocahontas county.

The region has been claimed by Randolph, Pendleton and Pocahontas and land titles taken out in each county. It finally fell to Pocahontas after a few flat fights between Randolph and Pocahontas representatives, which events were pulled off in the primeval forests. The result of the commission may be found recorded in Pocahontas but Randolph county has never sullied a pure white page with the iniquitous proceedings.

Durbin will be the big town of upper Pocahontas. It is 40 miles from Marlinton and 47 from Elkins. It is the southern terminal of the Wabash system in West Virginia, and there is a rumor that the railway shops are to be located here. The town started to grow at the fording of the West Fork, where one of the battles of the Civil War was fought, but the depot being located on the East Fork, the town is being located nearly a mile east of the first site. In old Durbin on the Far Branch the houses were of temporary character but the buildings around the depot are of substantial appearance. Still farther up the East Fork the Pocahontas Tanning Company is building its big plant. It is said to have the same capacity of the big tannery at Marlinton. They are not built on the same plans by any means and the style of architecture is so different it is hard to compare them. At Durbin there is one building 60x1000 feet which will be filled with vats, and the other buildings will be a correspondingly large scale. A long row of dwelling houses is situated on the Stanton and Parkersburg turnpike. The site of the tannery is at the old Slavin House, where Henry Clay used to come to hunt. Abraham Lincoln has also passed along the road here in the days of the stage coach. As we walked up to the tannery and stopped to take a drink of water at the spring we could almost see Henry Clay at the same place with a bottle of his favorite mixture regaling himself after a long tramp through the woods.

We passed on to Bartow, the terminal of the Greenbrier Division, and saw Mr. John Andrew Moore, in charge of a well-kept station of the O. & O. Railway. We remembered the time when we used to wagon with him to Millboro, and when S. L. Talley, the agent, who used to turn over the goods to fill our wagons, represented all that was great and good. To either of us a place of that kind was beyond our wildest dreams. This has not been so long ago, but one of us, at least, is a railway agent and fills wagons with all the plombs that distinguished Talley in the old days.

While there two hunters came in with two carcasses of deer which they had killed on the East Branch and which they were taking home with them to Charleston.

There is no prettier valley than that which lies the three miles between Durbin and Bartow or Travelers Rest as we used to know it. It is sure to be an important industrial section the nucleus of which will be the tannery and the depot.
